Given our unique mission, our role cannot be limited simply to teaching and training students. We must also provide an environment that encourages and supports pertinent legal research and scholarship by both faculty and students. This does not mean that we should offer a different course of instruction, but a different emphasis with concentration in subjects having direct application to finding solutions to human and social problems in the United States and throughout the world.

We recognize that Howard University School of Law is a small part of the greater legal educational community. We also recognize that we must distinguish ourselves in that community, and at the same time, serve our nation, especially African Americans and other minorities. Both HUSL students and faculty have a sincere appreciation for the institution's civil rights legacy and acknowledge a continuing responsibility to serve.

MISSION STATEMENT

Consistent with providing the professional leadership necessary to advocate and defend the rights of all, but particularly of African-Americans and other minorities, it is the Law School's mission to:

1. Educate and enable students to develop their highest capabilities and skills as lawyers;
2. Engage as an institution in the active pursuit of solutions to domestic and international legal, social, economic and political problems that are of particular concern to minority groups; and
3. Imbue its students with dedication to excellence and commitment to the solutions to those problems.
